Text A

A diary entry, about a visit to Amergau in the Austrian state of Tyrol, which was published in the book Notes of a Wanderer in 1839

AMERGAU, September 5.—I have now been five days at Amergau. The weather, with the exception of one day (the 2d), has been intensely cold, with almost constant rain. During the last thirty hours there has been an absolute deluge, and it now pours as if the fountains of heaven were unloosed. The tops of the hills that bound the valley are covered with snow, and the hurricanes of wind, rushing down from their frigid summits, almost carried away the roof of my cottage. I lay awake for two hours last night, in fear and trembling. I have been in consequence a close prisoner, quitting my cottage only to repair to the inn for dinner, and returning forthwith, to enjoy the warmth of my comfortable stove. Can it be that winter has already set in? The natives say no; but I wish I were well out of the Tyrol. Meantime, I am fortunate in having a snug shelter from the fury of the elements. Time passes smoothly enough, although I have no books, except a German primer¹ and a copy of Sallust²; the latter is a school prize, gained by one of the sons of my host. Hammering over the Catiline Conspiracy³ has been an agreeable and profitable pastime. I like the family with whom I lodge exceedingly. It consists of an old man and his wife, who is an elderly woman, fat and spheroidal as an orange, with a countenance “round as the shield of my fathers,” and the very picture of good nature. The children are three in number, two young lads of nineteen and fourteen, and a rosy coy⁴ maiden coming between. In the evenings, I join their domestic circle down stairs, and while away an hour in the enjoyment of music. The Tyrolese are essentially a musical people. The elder of the two boys plays on a rude⁵ guitar—the sister and younger brother accompanying him with a song.

² Sallust: a Roman historian

³ Catiline Conspiracy: a failed attempt to seize control of the Roman republic in 63BC.

⁴ coy: being shy, or pretending to be shy in order to appear attractive

⁵ rude: basic, simple or imperfect
